Mr. Allen W. Dulles

Dear Allen:

I am sure you remember [redacted] who came back to this country from Santo Domingo about three months ago and who has been down at his place in Asheville, North Carolina since that time. He is in New York this week, and when I saw him yesterday he told me that he is scouting around for some sort of job. Although he cannot afford to work on any "dollar a year man" basis, I think he is as much interested in the type of work he finds as the compensation that goes with it.

He tells me that he is going to be in Washington next week, staying with [redacted] and his wife ([redacted] is [redacted] cousin), and intends to talk to the State Department and several other government agencies. He said he would like very much to see you if possible during the week while he is there.

In case you do see him I thought you might like to have a brief sketch of his activities over the past thirty years, and therefore I enclose a copy herewith. He has had a wealth of experience which should qualify him for quite a variety of jobs. After such a long absence from the United States I gather from his conversation that he would not like to go abroad again immediately, and I also gather that he would prefer a job in Washington to one in New York. It is possible that there may be a place for him in the National Committee, but I have not taken this up with him as yet, and in any event I think he wants to explore all possibilities before he comes to any decision.

Sincerely,
